PHP2Shell Breach: AI Finds the Flaw First as Control Slips Away

This week the machines pulled ahead of the people who are supposed to watch them. PHP2Shell, a critical flaw in the software behind about 7 in 10 websites, has reportedly pushed governments to take sites offline, and AI helped find it. CNN warns that even AI's builders cannot fully explain their systems, and that the gap is growing. Meanwhile 'rea' has 386,416 stars, a repo claiming no-login frontier AI has 43,523, and MiniMax M3.1 Flash costs $0.15 per million input tokens. Some of these claims are unverified, and nobody can say who is pointing these tools at what. Only the truth.
