THE AI WORLD IS COMING APART: A Vanished Chief, Unleashed Models, Erased Truth

This week the foundations of the AI age shook, and nobody can say who is holding them up. Jensen Huang's exit has two newsrooms whispering of an "AI security crisis," yet the reason has not been made public. Videos warn of an OpenAI model "too powerful to release," though their descriptions are empty and none of it is verified. A tool built to strip AI watermarks has 27,537 GitHub stars, Claude Fable 5.2 is priced at $8/$40 per million tokens, and Inkling 2 Small's open weights, once public, cannot be recalled. Power is concentrating, proof is eroding and control is slipping, and we will keep watching every move. Only the truth.
