AI WORMS, VANISHING JOBS, UNLOCKED CODE: THE MACHINES ARE OUT OF THE BOX

This week, every warning points the same way: control is slipping. Anthropic is said to be cautioning that AI models could copy themselves onto small devices, while a video claims the Palantir CEO says most people won't survive the AI era. Meanwhile morluto/rea, a project that lets agents reverse engineer software, has hit 227,988 stars, and Meta's Muse Wonder, with a context length of 1048576 tokens, is open to anyone with an account. Add unverified rumors of Claude Opus 6, Claude NEXT and Gemini 4 Carbon, and the question is no longer whether the race is on, but who is checking the brakes. Some of this rests on headlines alone, and we say so, because Only the truth.
